The re-establishment of the Peel Ministry in Great Bri tain, has created a great deal of confidence in financia; and commercial circles. The fact that Sir Robert Feel had again become the premier was sufficient of itself to give commercial affairs a more favorable commlexion than they possessed during the "thirteen days." Although the Whig Ministry are considered more liberal than the conservatives in relation to commercial affairs, the comconservatives in relation to commercial affairs, the commercial classes appeared to have very little confidence in it, and considerable depression existed in the market so long as Lord John Russel was making efforts to form a ministry. A revival in every thing took place as soon as Peel took the helm, and the advices of his having done so had a corresponding effect on this side. It is supposed that the policy of the present ministry has somewhat changed, and that a commercial has been made in relation to the corn ning with a fixed duty between 15 and 20 shillings, and reduce it two shillings every year. Suppose the maximum fixed duty of 1846 and 1847 was placed at 18 shillings; 1847 and 1848, 16 shillings, and so on down still fee. placed at 18 shillings; 1847 and 1848, 16 shillings, and so on down, until it reaches 4 shillings, which is to be the minimum and permanently fixed it is further stated that this reduction may commence on the 1st of September, 1846, previous to which the ports will be opened for the free admission of corn from all parts of the world. This movement may do away with the other propositions, as it is supposed that if the ports of Great Britain, are once more opened to the free admission of corn from foreign countries, no ministry will be strong enough to close them again. The free such rapid strides and with so much strength and power that nothing can arrest its course. It makes no concession, it gives up no point, but goes for the most perfect freedom in the importation of bread-stuffs, and will not, we predict, submit to the I roposals supposed to have been made by the Whig les ders to Sir Robert Peel, to which it is stated the Consumption between the consumption and consumption the consumption to the consumption been made by the Whig les ders to Sir Robert Peel, to which it is stated the Consarvative ministry have agreed. The present Ministry may find themselves in the minority upon this question, s'acold it be determined to open the ports to September 1st, and an attempt be made to close them at that 'sime. We look anxiously forward to these movements in Parliament upon this question, and we anticipate considerable excitement in debate both in the Hayse of Lorde and in the Manne. and we anticipate considerable excitement in debate both in the House of Lords and in the House of Commons. A desperate attempt will be made by the landbolders to make any modification or ultimate repeal of the corr, laws as moderate as possible, and if a repeal is determined upon, it will be their aim to postpone that movement as long as possible. Compromises, ne doubt, have been proposed by the old tory leaders, but it is our impression that the free trade party is too strong to listen to any compromise, and if so, their ideas are fixed upon "the whole or none," no settlement will be made short of the whole.

From the tone of the leading English journals an emi-cable rettlement of the Oregon question appears to be a very easy matter. It has been suggested by the London Times, that this question might be settled by contidon Times, that this question might be settled by contrnuing the 49th degree from the mountains to the Pacific, giving Great BritainVancouver's Island, the harbor of St.

Face, and the free navigation of the Columbia river. A proposition of this kind was once made to Great Britain by Mr. Gallatin, under the administration of Mr. Adams; it now comes in a semi-official shape from the government of Great Britain, and we have no doubt, some settlement approximating very closely to the above division of the territory will be agreed upon. The mild ness of the British press in discussing the Oregon question is so totally different from that anticipated, that those on this side deeply interested in the preservation of

LATERT INTELLIGENCE BY THE MAILS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24, 1846. News has arrived in this city, to-day, from Mexi-co, stating that the revolution is complete, General co, stating that the revolution is complete, General Paredes having taken the reins of Government, without a struggle. It is said, also, that Paredes refuses to recognize Mr. Slidell: I merely mention the for lear your papers should fail. You will probably have full details in the papers. A slip was issued this morning from the Intelligencer office.

Mr. Buchanan gave a splendid party last night, at Carusi's saloon. I will give you something more about this, by the next mail.

The vote on the rejection of Mr. Woodward, as Judge of the Supreme Court, was twenty for him, and twenty-nine against him. They were all democrats who voted for him.

Crats who voted for him.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24, 1846.

Last evening the steamboat Chesapeake, from Richmond, Va., after having made her way up the Potomac through the ice, and landed sately at the wharf all her passengers and their baggage, sprung a leak, filled and sunk in eight or ten feet water, tide down—bottom of the boat supposed to have been fracturedfby the ice.

All the hacks in the city are in requisition this evening for Mr. Buchanan's ball and banquet. It is to be a bumper. We shall have something to say about it to-morrow.

News of the arrival of the Hibernia in—and of Peel's re instalment.

Washington, Jan. 24, 1846.

dell, dated at Mexico on the 16th ult., which state that Paredes had entered that city a few days previous, in triumph, overturned the existing govern-ment, and proceeded to organize one in its stead. No resistance was offered his entry. He has refused to receive a Minister from this country, so that Mr. Slidell is now perhaps on his way home. It is said that England is at the bottom of this affair.

There is the d——I to pay here at this time, in the Democratic party. The chiques opposed to the Administration are bent upon breaking it up, nolens vo-Democratic party. The cliques opposed to the Administration are bent upon breaking it up, notens volens. Father Ritchie is out of favor with them, and must be crushed beneath the pressure of the power that is now bearing down upon him. About twenty Senators signed a paper, within a day or two, to throw up the Union, and withdraw their patronage from it; but, one member from that body having refused to do the same, it has been withdrawn, for the present. You see, from this, thet I have been upon the right track for six weeks past, when I announced a coalition between the Benton, Van Buren and Calhoun factions to crush Mr. Polk. This has grown out of the independent course that the President has taken with respect to diques, and his denial to them of the right which they have seen fit to concede to themselves, of dictating terms to him. The President has only to stand fast to the great leading principles of national and international policy which have brought him into power, and throw himself upon the people for aid in this crisis—the most trying, perhaps, that he may encounter during his Presidential term—the people will cheerfully respond to his appeal, and overthrow the cliques. Mr. Polk must first change his Cabinet—which, I understand has now been determined upon—and drive dissension from his own councils, before he proceeds to prune the fungi from other parts of the body politic.

The Herald must take the lead in this battle of the factions, and settle the question before they come to war. It is the only regulator upon the continent, and the only proper agent for settling the balance of power, notwithstanding Guizot's project to settle it by the intervention of foreign powers.

Mr. Buchanan will now, no doubt, go upon the bench of the Supreme Court, and remain there in peace the rest of his days of single blessedness, unless called out by some fair one, to preside over the family union, which such connexion might create.

Every whill you appeal, and of preside over the family union, of Boston, and Henry Hor

I owe a thousand apologies to her Excellenza, Mrs. Polk, for the haste with which I jumped to the conclusion, in my letter of yesterday, that there would be no regular assemblies this season at the White House. The little reliance that I place upon the statements in the Union, makes me seldom hence the oversight of not learning by it that last night a debut in the fashionable entertainments of the season, was to come off, under the auspices of her democratic majesty.

The gathering in the East room was pretty full, but not so brilliant as might be. There was not a foreign minister to be seen, and but three or four coats with a button upon the collar. The Cabinet, too, were rather remiss in their attendance, for which they deserve to be put in Coventry by the lovely lady of the mansion. Gov. Marcy, who is a strict observer of court etiquette, was there, with a new pair of panta upon which I did not discover any patch; so was George Bancroit, the Secretary of the Navy. The ladies were making special inquiry for Mr. Bachanan. His absence seemed to trouble some of them that old bachelor away from usto-sight and the that old bachelor away from usto-sight and the that old bachelor away from usto-sight of the strength of the mansion. His absence seemed to trouble some of the foreign the seemed to trouble some upon his heart? Mr. Walker was engaged in demonstrating the absurdity of minimum, and found a proof of it in his own patite person; and therefore concluded it were better to remain at home, arranging the tartiff, than run the risk of being lost in the crowd. Cave Johnson was also among the missing. Cave is a rigid economist, and goes against useless expenditures upon all occasions. It thought, perhaps, that his presence at the levee might give encouragement to prodigality in the way of a pound or two extra of spermacet; and so absented himself to con over the returns of his deputies. Cave is a man of leiters. The ladies, Godoless them, looked well, and just as if they had come out of a milliner's bandbox. Some of them muss all that the admirers of the fine arts could desire. Colonel Grandin, of your city, was among the ratio and the strength of the was more theretary, observed of all observers; his fine whiskers, titlad rundry disce, and gentlemanly address, made him the star of the night among the leminine gender. The marine band was there, in a handsome blue uniform, under the command of that initiality and control of the break monde. About 10 o'clock, the President and lady, took a promote the president was the same of t
